In our chapters, these questions are raised with reference to a number of cases from the field of love between human beings. The following cases are presented in this chapter, viz., 1. Knowledge that exists only in some form of subjective consciousness, and is distinct from the form of consciousness; 2. Knowledge which exists only in a sense-perception- and can be known only through sense-perception; 3. Knowledge which is a state of mind or mental state, e.g., affection, grief, etc., and can be known only through such states; 4. Knowledge which exists only in a feeling-emotion- and is known only through such states, e.g., physical affection and distress, and hence the relation between the feeling-emotion and the knowledge; 5. Knowledge which exists only in a form of subjectivity and is known through such states; 6. Knowledge which exists only in a form of objectivity and is known through such states; 7. Knowledge which is a state of mind and can be known only through sense-
